Tara +

Sara Schamber, '11 Dietetics Major, wanted to raise awareness concerning food issues among her peers on campus and within the profession, so she created a campus vegetable garden she called Southern Roots and published an article (Southern Roots Growing Vegetable Dreams on a College Campus) in the national + last fall. The article explained the process that led her to develop the Southern Roots student organization at USI. The organization has 1 registered members that participate in various activities, including planting and harvesting the produce garden, attending local herb gardening classes and volunteering at Seton Harvest, a local non-profit, community-supported-agriculture farm.
